Solid Waste Authority Executive Director To Serve As President of NYSASWM

The New York State Association for Solid Waste Management (NYSASWM) membership has elected William Rabbia, Oneida-Herkimer Solid Waste Authority Executive Director, to serve on the executive committee of the NYSASWM Board of Directors as President. Rabbia has been an active member of NYSASWM and most recently served as Vice President.

James Biamonte, Oneida-Herkimer Solid Waste Authority Environmental Coordinator, also serves as a Board member and former president of NYSASWM.

NYSASWM is New York State's oldest and largest statewide solid waste organization with a mission to promote efficient, effective and environmentally sound solid waste management practices in New York State through the training, education and evaluation of technologies. Since its inception in 1975, NYSASWM has worked with solid waste managers throughout New York State toward its mission. NYSASWM currently has over 400 members.

"Through the Association, the Authority has been able to work with its counterparts across the State to have a unified voice in Albany and to foster information sharing and education and training opportunities", stated Rabbia.
